Reflection

There was a bunch of challenges I've faced throughout the creation of the game. One of biggest challenges that I faced was trying to create a decent story with the limited amount of time that I had. I have never really done creative writing before, so this was a first for me. I was having a difficult time trying to design a story, so I tried to draw inspiration from basic stories that I've heard. I went with the classic dragon and princess trope. Then I wanted to at least make it a little unique so I added my own twist onto it. Another challenge I faced during the creation of this project was trying to figure out when to put tricks and when not to. I've gotten a lot of feedback saying they weren't the biggest fan of traps, so I had a dilemma trying to figure what to do with it. I decided to make only one level a trick level to give that tense feeling for the rest of the game.
A different challenge that I have faced was time constraints. I was sick for a bit of time which delayed everything. It got me behind in all of my classes. I had to put a lot more time into each of my classes in order to overcome being that far behind. An additional problem I faced was with the platforms; I was able to get them to go in the direction that I wanted them to go in, but the sprite would always flip when it went the opposite direction.
